Hiring Manager

Escapology

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to express my strong interest in the Website and Marketing Technology Manager role at Escapology. The position maps closely to work I have been doing: owning web products built on Next.js and React, managing external development partners, driving analytics and MarTech integration, and translating business requirements into clear technical deliverables that get shipped and measured.

In my current freelance work I have built and launched production applications on Next.js, Vercel, Supabase, and Stripe, with GitHub-based CI/CD pipelines and GA4 tracking implemented from the ground up. I understand how frontend rendering, API integration, deployment workflows, and caching interact because I have shipped these systems myself. That hands-on experience gives me the ability to review agency proposals critically, ask the right questions about approach and tradeoffs, and recognize when a recommendation does not fully address the underlying problem. At Ferguson Enterprises I served as the internal product owner for cross-functional data integration projects, translating business needs into technical specifications, managing backlogs and vendor timelines, and holding development partners accountable for quality and outcomes across a large organization. At Catalyzt Nutrition I owned digital operations end-to-end, including vendor management, Zapier and Mailchimp automation stacks, Meta and Google tracking, and agency coordination.

Escapology's infrastructure stack is one I work in directly: Next.js on AWS with CloudFront, GitHub-managed code, API-driven booking, and a MarTech layer spanning GA4, Meta, Google, Mailchimp, and Zapier. I understand how content publishing through a headless CMS, cache invalidation, and page regeneration interact, and I know what questions to ask when publishing delays or tracking discrepancies surface. The Vercel migration you referenced is work I have done at the application level and can evaluate clearly from a business and operational standpoint.

Supporting 120-plus locations across a corporate and franchise structure is a meaningful accountability. I take that seriously, and I bring the project management discipline, vendor accountability standards, documentation habits, and technical fluency to make sure Escapology's website team delivers consistent, well-measured results at that scale. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss the role further and show you how my background applies directly to what you are building.
